

BOMBARDIER DELIVERED THE FIRST CHALLENGER 3500 BUSINESS JET IN COSTA RICA

News / Business aviation, Manufacturer

Bombardier delivered its first Challenger 3500 business jet in Costa Rica. This marks a significant milestone for the manufacturer in Central America. Challenger 3500 aircraft offers the ultimate combination of performance, comfort and reliability to customers around the world. The combination of range and speed, Challenger 3500 enables seamless connectivity between key Central American capitals and major cities across the Americas. From San José, operators can efficiently reach destinations such as Los Angeles, New York, Santiago, and Buenos Aires — demonstrating the jet's remarkable capability for regional and long-range travel.

Michael Anckner, Vice President, Worldwide Pre-owned, Fleet, Defense, & Latin America commented: "With its high reliability, modern cabin and exceptional runway performance, the Challenger 3500 has quickly established itself as the aircraft of choice for customers around the world as well as in Central America. The Challenger 3500 aircraft is a proven, across-the-board performer that delivers on Bombardier's promise to take the passenger experience to new heights. This delivery marks an important growth milestone for our fleet in Central America and clearly demonstrates the trust that clients in the region have in Bombardier."

This first delivery in Costa Rica particularly highlights the aircraft's ability to connect the country to essential business and leisure hubs. Since its introduction in 2022, the Challenger 3500 has quickly become a preferred choice for Bombardier's customers, building on the Challenger 300 family long-standing success as the most delivered super-midsize jet in the world.
